MENTIONED IN ORDERS

[Original.]

Joe was his name, and no one at the fort had ever heard of his having another. He was a half breed, who had come to the post with information that the Indians were preparing to rise, and since his information had proved correct he was trusted implicitly. The Indians not only rose, but soon after left the reservation and laid siege to the fort. It was but a two company post, incapable of a long defense against the thousands of Indians who encamped around it, and unless succor arrived in time it would be taken and the garrison massacred.

There was one person in the fort who mistrusted Joe, and that was Lucia, daughter of the commandant, Major McGregor. She often caught Joe casting longing eyes upon her, and somehow she did not quite like their expression. She warned her father to look out for the half breed, but as she gave no reason and Joe had given information of the rising the major declined to be influenced.

One evening Joe appeared hurriedly before Lucia and told her that her father had sent him for her. She followed him, and he led her to an angle of the fort, where he rolled away a barrel, disclosing a small aperture. Before the girl could gather his intent he had seized her and forced her into a sort of casemate that opened into the powder magazine. This done he pulled the barrel back where he had found it. Lucia would not have known she was in the magazine had not a lighted lantern been left there on a shelf some distance from the powder to enable those coming for ammunition to see. But Joe left her no time to consider. Removing a barrel of powder, he exposed a second aperture. Then after binding a handkerchief which he had brought for the purpose over her mouth he pulled her through, and they were outside the fort.

Had Lucia not been horror stricken at her situation she would have realized Joe's real intention in going to the fort with the information that the Indians were about to attack it. While it would warn the garrison, it would enable him to win the white men's confidence, look about him and possibly find a weak spot through which he might introduce the savages. Joe had during dark nights dug a hole in the earth into the casemate connecting with the powder magazine and another hole outside. He could lead an attacking force at night, a part of whom could engage the garrison, while another part might steal into the powder magazine. In truth, the man entering there would hold the garrison at his mercy. The wonder was that Joe had not put a time fuse there and blown the fort to atoms. He had been seized with a desire to possess the major's daughter, and this led to his ultimate plan.

Joe hurried his victim along, she meanwhile, if not recovering from her fright, at least realizing that she must make some move, invent some stratagem, before it was too late or she was lost. The only thing that occurred to her was to pretend to faint. She sank down with a groan. Joe immediately picked her up and carried her on. But the night was dark, and Joe was in very much of a hurry. The consequence was that, stepping into a hole he did not see, he fell with his burden. Lucia took advantage of the accident to get up and run like a deer toward the fort. Joe could have easily caught her but for two reasons—first, he had hurt a leg; second, Lucia ran more recklessly than he dared run, risking a fall at every step. She lunged to cry out, but dared not lose a second in removing the handkerchief that gagged her. She reached the fort and entered the hole not ten seconds before Joe pushed his larger body more slowly through it. When he got inside he saw Lucia standing beside one of the barrels of powder, the head of which had been removed, holding the lamp of the lantern over the powder.

"Stop or I drop the light!" The man saw desperation in her eyes and halted.

"Come away," he said. "You will kill yourself as well as me." Her only reply was to move the light, holding it within a few inches of the powder, and give a piercing shriek. A sentry walking past in front of the magazine door heard the cry. At another time he would have called the corporal of the guard, who would have reported the matter, and the authorized person would have come with the key and opened the door, but for several days constant access to the ammunition had been necessary and the door left unlocked. The sentry brought his piece to a level and flung open the door. There stood the colonel's daughter, white as a ghost, holding a lamp over a powder barrel. Joe was glancing at her, trembling from head to foot.

"Take him!" said Lucia. The sentry brought his piece to his shoulder and, looking along its muzzle, gave the order "Hands up!" Then Joe was marched away to the guardhouse. There were both consternation and relief when it was known that Joe had so nearly succeeded in not only getting away with the colonel's daughter, but had very nearly led the Indians into the magazine. In the morning the Indians saw Joe's body hanging to an arm nailed to the flagstaff. Since they had expected him to lead them into the magazine the night he had made the attempt, seeing that he had failed and knowing that succor was near, they raised the siege.

Lucia McGregor is one of the few women who have been mentioned in orders for "gallant and meritorious conduct."

A DELIBERATE MAN.

He Ate His Full Dinner and Caught the Stage as Well.

Charles Stuart, one time senator from Michigan, was traveling by stage through his own state. The weather was bitterly cold, the snow deep, the roads practically unbroken. The stage was nearly one hour late at the dinner station, everybody was more or less cross and in a hurry and the situation uncomfortable to the last degree.

Senator Stuart sat down to his dinner with his usual deliberation, notwithstanding the word that was passed around, "Fifteen minutes for refreshments."

When he had finished his first cup of coffee the passengers were leaving the table. By the time the second cup arrived the stage was at the door. "All aboard!" shouted the driver. The senator lingered and called for a third cup of coffee. The crowd laughed and flung back chaff at the deliberate man at the table.

While the household, as was the custom, assembled at the door to see the stage drive away, the senator continued calmly drinking his coffee. Suddenly, just as the stage started, there was a violent pounding on the dining room table, and the landlord hurried in, to find that the senator wanted a dish of rice pudding. When it came he called for a spoon, but there wasn't a spoon to be found.

"That shock headed fellow took 'em; I thought he was a crook!" exclaimed the landlady.

The landlord jumped at the same conclusion.

"Hurry after that stage; bring 'em all back!" he shouted to the sheriff, who was untying his horse from the rail in front of the tavern.

A few minutes later the stage, in charge of the sheriff, swung around in front of the house. The driver was in a fury.

"Search them passengers!" yelled the landlord.

But before the officer could move the senator opened the stage door, stepped inside, then leaned out, touched the sheriff's arm and whispered:

"Tell the landlord he'll find his spoons in the coffee-pot."—Boston Post.

WISDOM OF NOVELISTS.

There is no man so cautious about money as your reformed spendthrift.—G. B. Burgin.

Men who stand much upon their dignity have not, as a rule, much else to stand upon.—Seton Merriman.

The virtues of our loved ones we admire. Their failings we would forget. But over their follies we love to linger smiling.—Jerome K. Jerome.

Any fool can get a notion. It needs training to drive a thing through—training and conviction, not rushing after the first fancy.—Rudyard Kipling.

Sometimes a chance remark, which has very little significance for the person who makes it, is like an aperture that lets in light on the whole character.—Sarah Grand.

Superstition, in its essence, is merely a recognition of the truth that in a universe of mysteries and contradictions, like ours, nothing conceivable or inconceivable is impossible.—Henry Harland.

The Judge's Advantage.

One of the best stories of Judge Parry, a famous English jurist, related to a feeble looking man who was rebuked for supporting a ridiculous claim made by his wife. "I tell you candidly, I don't believe a word of your wife's story," said Judge Parry.

"You may do as you like," replied the man mournfully, "but I've got to."

It was once the doubtful privilege of Judge Parry to overhear the comments of two men against whom he had decided. "E's a fool, but 'e id 'is best," was the verdict of these disappointed suitors. "One might sleep under an unkindler epithet," was the philosophic comment of the judge.

Ventilation Through the Walls.

The fact is that considerable ventilation is capable of taking place and quite a large exchange of fresh for bad air is effected through the walls of buildings. Many a room that is notoriously stuffy could doubtless be made pleasant to live in by removing the solid paper or impervious coat of paint from the wall and substituting porous paper, or, better still, giving up paper altogether and using a distemper wash of pleasing tone.—London Lancet.

What She Lacked.

A superintendent of a Sunday school relates the following true incident:

The title of the lesson was "The rich young man" and the golden text "One thing thou lackest." A lady teacher in the primary class asked a little tot to repeat the two, and, looking earnestly in the teacher's face, the child unblushingly told her, "One thing thou lackest—a rich young man."

Just Looking.

"Did you say your husband was out looking for work?"

"No, I believe he's out looking at work. There are some men digging a cellar down at the corner, and he doesn't seem able to get any farther."—Philadelphia Press.

It Didn't Work.

"This'll be good for a hundred anyhow," said young Sow His Wild Oats to his pal. "Every young fellow needs a stake when he is of age, so I'll send this telegram collect to the old man: 'Dear Father—I am twenty-one today and broke.'"

An hour later the fond father wired collect:

"So was I when I was twenty-one."

His Suspicious Aroused.

Burns—So your new play was performed last night? Was there a call for the author? Plotter—There was no general demand for his appearance, but I heard one or two men say they'd like to see the man who wrote it.
